Where Business Case Practitioners talk and share

Simon Kinrade

We'd like to invite you to join the Business Case Practitioner Forum which is part of the online network that makes up the Government Project Delivery Community (GovPDC). It's not just for government, though, it is for all sectors – private, public, not-for-profit or academia. The group is for those with an interest in business cases as a part of a professional or voluntary role. The group helps us connect with each other, share ideas, knowledge and experience, solve problems, stay in touch and make new relationships across organisational boundaries.

The forum is a community of practice, hosted on the Knowledge Hub Platform and within the award winning Civil Service wide online Professional Network, 'The Government Project Delivery Community'(GovPDC). Joining up puts you in touch with people who share your interest and over 1500 project and programme management professionals across the public sector, industry and academia.

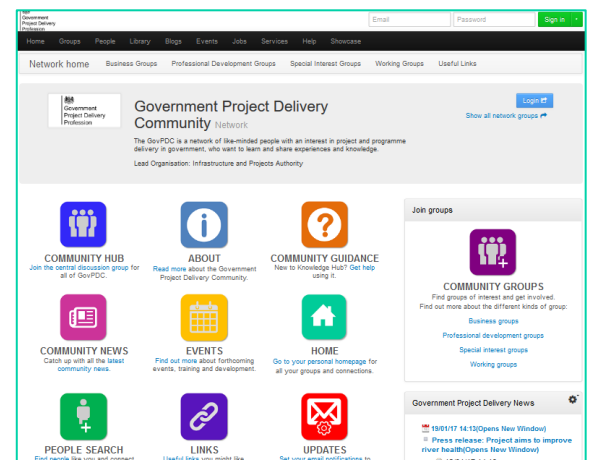

Why join?

It offers you a secure online space where you can:

- build relationships that transcend organisational boundaries;
- collaborate with others to share ideas and solve problems;
- find people who know the answers to your questions because they have done it before
- share your experiences for others to learn from.

We encourage you to also make use of the wider GovPDC network to

- join other groups in GovPDC
- grow your own capability by learning from others and assisting your peers
- broaden your knowledge by connecting with others outside of your organisation

The site is UK-hosted and fully supported by experienced community managers and has been assessed as compliant with Civil Service security accreditation up to and including Official.
